San Francisco 49ers Week Nine Recap

Week nine of the NFL Football season featured the San Francisco 49ers going on their bye week. The team's bye week could not have come at a better time, as multiple 49ers are dealing with injuries. Stars like Deebo Samuel and Trent Williams should be good to go come Sunday. However, standout guard Aaron Banks may need another week or two for his injury. Another player getting some much-needed rest is Brock Purdy, who suffered a concussion in the Minnesota game. Purdy was able to play the following week against the Bengals but hit the ground hard on a hit. Though it begs the question, if this injury could further aggravate his symptoms, this week off will do him justice. In other news, the trade deadline happened this week as well. The 49ers were working the phones trying to work a deal, leading to them landing edge rusher Chase Young. The 49ers dealt a third-round pick to Washington for Young. This trade reunites Nick Bosa and Chase Young, who were teammates at Ohio State. Young will provide the 49ers with some speed off the edge opposite of Bosa, a wise trade. The 49ers also sought help in the secondary, but nothing materialized in time. Look for Young to debut against the Jacksonville Jaguars as the 49ers try to get back to winning.
