

Week 4:
Column 1:

Lindy is a sweet, domestic rabbit with a little lion's mane around her neck. This five pound bundle of love was found roaming the mean streets of Fairfax when a kind citizen was able to rescue her. She was lucky enough to get to the marine humane society with no sign of any physical harm though I'm sure she was shaken up from trying to rough it as a street bunny. Lindy loves a variety of toys, snacks as well as affection and will hop up to you when she wants to be petted. She also likes to occasionally nibble on clothes so keep your socks off the floor! Because of this little quirk she would be best kept in a home with adults and older children. She would be the perfect addition to your family whether you are experienced with rabbit ownership or if you are a first time bunny caregiver.

Column 2:

Patty is a young dog with lots of love to give, patiently waiting to one day find her forever home. The shelter is unsure of her exact age and breeding since she was a stray found in Corte Madera but their best approximation is that she is a two year-old Collie and Great Pyrenees mix. It's likely that Patty has received no formal training so she will need a bit more attention than the average dog. She would be best served if she was the first dog in the house so she can receive more one-on-one attention as she learns her manners. Patty would be a wonderful family dog for children over 12 because she is a big girl and doesn't quite know how to control her movements yet which might pose a problem for small children. She does need a bit of training but she already is extremely loving, playful and friendly with dogs and people.
