

Veterans Day Goes Unrecognized at Dominican University, Students Express Disappointment

Dominican Student Services

Edited by Brooke Vafi and Jo Merkrud

At Dominican University of California on November 11th, there was no celebration for Veterans Day this year, leaving many students confused. The day, which honors military veterans, passed without any events or acknowledgments on campus. This lack of recognition led some students to take to social media, posting messages in support of veterans and expressing their acts of service. Many feel the university missed an important opportunity to show respect for those who have served, especially since the school emphasizes community and service. For students, the absence of any celebration feels disrespectful to veterans.