

The 49er Quarterback Situation

This year we saw something with the 49ers that is quite rare in the NFL. After an injury to both Trey Lance, the hopeful future franchise qb, and the tried and tested Jimmy Garapallo, Brock Purdy aka Mr. Irrelevant in the 2022 NFL draft put on a more than impressive showing, leading the 49er's to a playoff win and an undefeated season record while he was starting. This is great news but leaves big questions about what to do with three quarterbacks. Many are suggesting trades for each or even two of the three. Many are giving up on Trey Lance saying that Purdy is their new guy. But what many NFL analysts are saying and what people are failing to see is that they don't have to trade anyone. They have three more than competent QB's, two of which are still on rookie deals for relatively cheap. Keeping them will only increase their value, become great assets for future inquiries, and make for an extremely competitive quarterback environment. In short, the 49er's are in one of the best possible positions you can be in the NFL. They have two young stars for the price of one and a tried and tested mentor to help them reach new heights. It's a good day to be a 49er fan!
