Sylvie Morgan:
Editor: San Francisco
Weekly Contributor: What is happening in San Francisco this weekend?

Things To Do In San Francisco This Weekend

With Halloween just around the corner, San Francisco is offering plenty of ways to spend the weekend, whether you're looking for festive activities, live music, or simply an excuse to explore the city. From outdoor events to food and entertainment, the weekend of October 23–25 offers opportunities to get out of the house and experience something new. For those of you who enjoy the outdoors there is plenty for you in the city. One option could be the Leap Sandcastle Classic at Ocean Beach on Saturday afternoon. It is a super fun event where you can enjoy the views of the beach while also getting to see some sculptures. Music lovers also have options this weekend. The Afro-Filipino Jazz Project is scheduled to perform at Yerba Buena Gardens on Saturday afternoon. This event brings cultures and people together through music. Food can also be a great reason to head into the city this weekend. On Sunday, visitors can explore the Ferry Building area, known for its food vendors, waterfront views, and specialty shops. It is an easy way to turn a casual afternoon into an outing, whether that means trying something new to eat or walking along the Embarcadero.Whether spending the afternoon at the beach, discovering local artists, listening to live music, or exploring the waterfront, San Francisco offers plenty of ways to make the most of the weekend. Sometimes, the best way to break up the routine is simply to choose a new neighborhood, try something different, and see what the city has to offer.