Sunsets at Muir Beach

Muir beach is a sheltered cove that is stretched along the Marin County coastline. Gentle waves rolled onto the shore as many people came together and huddled around fires. During this time the sky gradually started to change to many different colors, showing shades of orange, blue, and pink. These colors reflected off of the shore of the pacific ocean and the surrounding cliffs. As the night progressed the colors faded and the beach grew quieter. Flames were left quietly burning as people packed up and headed home as the beach closed after sunset.
