

Students Struggle to Afford Travel Home for Thanksgiving Due to High Costs

Dominican student services

Edited by Brooke Vafi and Jo Markrud

Next week at Dominican University of California, students have classes on Tuesday before Thanksgiving, which makes it hard for many to go home for the holiday. Flying home during Thanksgiving week is expensive, and ticket prices are often too high for students to afford. With the added cost of travel during this busy time, many students find it difficult to return home, especially when they are already dealing with the financial strain of tuition and other expenses. As a result, some students will stay on campus for the holiday, which can be tough when they are hoping to be with family but can't afford to make the trip.