

Copenhagen's Comin' Through

Copenhagen is one of the typically overlooked fashion scenes, while still having just as much beauty to share as the classics like Milan, Paris, and New York. With its rich culture and reputation as the "City of Fairytales", Copenhagen does its best to carry its notoriety into its fashion scene.

Seeing a landscape of faux furs, leg warmers, and oversized coats, the head-turners of Copenhagen Fashion Week Fall 2023 were ready to balance the chilly comfort with jaw-dropping looks. Specifically looking at the street-style scene– it showed that to stay warm between shows and on your way to work, you don't have to compromise your "best-dressed" title.

Continuing the city's reputation for mixing contemporary styles with traditional ones, many models were seen sporting classic pieces such as lined trench coats, oversized puffer jackets, and balaclavas which we became all too familiar with during the media's time in Paris Fashion Week. Along with these classic pieces, models and everyday people braving the chilly streets with more contemporary pieces. This included a prominent highlight of people playing around with different textures on their clothing with everything from patchwork knit sweaters to fringe jackets and even tulle lining.

These everyday citizens of the fashion world are few among the many who will be showing off their most experimental looks during the fashion months, which only goes to show that Copenhagen is defending its spot as the leading Nordic fashion week.

Edited by: Annelise Maraj, Madeline Hernandez, Aspen Neitzel