

Pond Rocks San Francisco with High-Energy Show and Epic Crowd Surfing at Regency Ballroom

Dominican University of California Entertainment

By Brooke Vafi

Last Tuesday, Australian band Pond brought their high-energy show to the Regency Ballroom in San Francisco, delivering a performance that had the crowd buzzing. The band mixed classic tracks with new material from their latest album, filling the room with infectious grooves and psychedelic beats. At one point, lead singer Nick Allbrook took the energy to the next level by crowd surfing, much to the delight of the fans. “It was wild to see him crowd surf—he was right above us, and the whole crowd was just feeding off that energy,” said Sarah Miller, a longtime fan. Pond’s lively, adventurous performance proved why they continue to be one of the most exciting live bands around.