Badminton is a sport that you can play in singles, doubles, or mixed doubles with your friends or by yourself. It was founded in the 1860s and it was accepted as an actual sport in the olympics in the year 1985. It was invented by no one in particular because it evolved from a modern pastime in the ancient times and it was eventually shaped by the British military officers in 19th-century India.

There was a widespread rejection toward the sport because there was no actual rulebook for it, and it was mostly assumed as a “backyard” activity rather than an actual sport. The rulebook was First drafted in 1977 by the ‘The Badminton Club’ in England. The final draft of the rulebook that became the official rule book was published in 1934.
